

POLLS: Support for Cuts vs. No Cuts in Annual Immigration in Key States

POLLING RESULTS FOR LIKELY MID-TERM VOTERS: The first number in each state is the percentage who said annual legal immigration should be cut from one million to 750,000, 500,000, or 250,000 or less (the top choice in most states). The second number is the percentage who chose to keep the number at one million or to increase it. Pulse Opinion Research did the polling over the past year. Repeated national polling over that time found little change in voters' opinions on this question.

NumbersUSA Education & Research Foundation has been sponsoring polling by Pulse Opinion Research of likely mid-term voters in Senate, House and Presidential battleground states over the last year.

The majority of voters in all 25 polled states chose immigration levels at least 25% lower than the current one. The favorite choice was a level requiring at least a 75% cut in annual numbers. (The number of respondents in nearly all the states was 1,000.)

THE QUESTION: Current federal policy adds about one million new immigrants with lifetime work permits each year. Which is closest to the number of new immigrants the government should be adding each year -- less than 250,000, 500,000, 750,000, one million, one and a half million, or more than two million?

The state results cover a period of 15 months. National polling over that same period found very little variation in opinion favoring cuts versus favoring no cuts.

62% vs. 25% -- March 7-8, 2018

60% vs. 27% -- Dec. 19-20, 2017

55% vs. 29% -- Oct. 2-3, 2017

61% vs. 26% -- Aug. 24-25, 2017

62% vs. 23% -- July 24-25, 2017

63% vs. 24% -- April 19-20, 2017

59% vs. 27% -- Feb. 15-19, 2017

Even going back to April 1-2 before the 2014 midterm elections, the results found similar opinions, with 63% of likely voters favoring cutting immigration to 750,000 or less, compared with 21% favoring staying at one million or increasing the number.

“Despite consistent polling showing that most Americans have favorable opinions about immigrants, it is clear that voters also think that one million a year is too much,” commented NumbersUSA president Roy Beck. “All eventual compromises that may lead to government action must meet this basic desire for less immigration.”
